

KATHLEEN KENDALL is a Senior Lecturer in Sociology as Applied to Medicine in the School of Medicine at the University of Southampton, UK. Kathy teaches sociology to medical students and most of her research has focused on the intersection between criminalization and madness. Her current research projects includes a history of the Rockwood Criminal Lunatic Asylum, the first stand-alone institution for individuals considered both ‘mad’ and ‘bad’; a critical examination of a mental health education experiment conducted during the 1950s by Elaine and John Cumming in Indian Head Saskatchewan; and human experimentation in Canadian prisons (with Dorothy Proctor).
