

DIANE PURVEY is Associate Professor in the Faculty of Human, Social and Educational Development at Thompson Rivers University in Kamloops, B.C., where she teaches in both the undergraduate and graduate programs. Beginning with an M.A. study of Vancouver's Alexandra Orphanage and families in crisis, her research has addressed notions of deviance from prescriptive norms, particularly in the context of institutions. These include restorative justice practices in elementary schools, the history of deinstitutionalization of mental health clients in British Columbia, and memorial-building by adolescents in high schools. She is the co-author of Private Grief, Public Mourning: The Rise of the Roadside Shrine in British Columbia (Anvil Press, 2009) and the co-editor of Child and Family Welfare in British Columbia: A History (Detselig Press, 2005). Currently, she is working on a history of Vancouver from 1930 to 1960, entitled Vancouver Noir, which explores representations in the photographic record of crime, criminality, and justice. A long-time resident of Vancouver's Downtown Eastside, Dr. Purvey has worked at the Carnegie Centre, volunteered with foodbanks, and has engaged with residents' associations to create more inclusive communities.
