

KATHY TEGHTSOONIAN (Professor, Studies in Policy and Practice Program, University of Victoria) is a member of the Translating History/Shaping Practice project. Her recent research has focused on developing a critical analysis of initiatives to address depression in the workplace and depression as a public health issue. It has been published in Social Science & Medicine and in Contesting Illness: Processes and Practices (University of Toronto Press, 2008) which she co-edited. She teaches a graduate seminar on Critical Perspectives on Mental Illness and Mental Health and served on the local advisory board for Madness, Citizenship & Social Justice, a 2008 conference for academics and psychiatric survivors.
