

JAYNE MELVILLE WHYTE is a researcher, speaker and writer and mental health advocate. Since 1965, she experienced the mental health fragments (not system) and continues to recover from multiple dissociation. In 1975, she began with the Canadian Mental Health Association and was a pioneer in the national consumer/survivor movement in the 1980s. Her current projects focus on the history and current conditions for mental health care in Saskatchewan and beyond. She can be contacted through jayne.whyte@sasktel.net. Jayne added, “I’m not an academic and I am a woman living in poverty so my involvement in the collective may be limited, but I continue to advocate ‘nothing about us without us’, so I believe it is important for me to be a corresponding member of the History of Madness collective.”
